ROMANIA: Protection and assistance provided to victims of human trafficking.

AIDRom continued to be a main actor in 2022 in terms of assistance to victims of human trafficking in Romania.

Thus, in AIDRom's multifunctional centers, victims of human trafficking had access to counseling services, therapy and individualized intervention, accompaniment in educational endeavors, educational support and support for integration into the university environment. Residential assistance continued as permanent services, but also material assistance, support consisting of food and sanitary products.

Our efforts also focused on mediating the relationships of victims of human trafficking with their family of origin, a prerequisite for a good reintegration into the family.

We have not neglected, in the framework of our activity, the counseling of people in a situation of risk or social vulnerability. The counseling approach was aimed at people from vulnerable categories. Thus, the unemployed, refugees, asylum seekers, single women benefited from counseling services to integrate them into the labor market.

Together with the specialists of the National Agency Against Trafficking in Persons, we were also present at the Regional Centers for Accommodation and Procedures for Asylum Seekers, where asylum seekers from various countries benefited from information to prevent their risk of trafficking and to reduce their vulnerability to human trafficking

The Romanian authorities have developed a coordinated response to manage as best as possible the problems faced by refugees, on all levels, including the risk of them being exploited in the context of human trafficking, meaning that all the actors involved have carried out activities which would remove or limit the possibility of victimization of refugees through human trafficking. At the MAI level, action was taken through specific measures on the anti-trafficking component, as well as on prevention and support

ANITP, together with institutional partners (government institutions, local authorities, non-governmental organizations and international organizations), carried out supported activities by providing refugees with the necessary information, in the Ukrainian language, to prevent victimization.

Thus, numerous materials (flyers, brochures) were developed, which contain emergency phone numbers, were being distributed at border crossing points and asylum centers, this information being also posted on the websites and social networks of actors involved in the fight against human trafficking, including the Romanian Government.

Also, ANITP staff, throughout the country, carry out information/training actions for specialists who may encounter potential victims, regarding traffic indicators and how to act in such situations.

At the end of October, the first meeting of the National Working Group for the prevention of sexual exploitation, abuse and the risks associated with human trafficking, intended for people displaced from Ukraine, took place at the Government headquarters. The agenda of the meeting had as its starting point the five directions of action based on the European Commission's plan:

- Awareness of human trafficking;
- Consolidation of prevention activities;
- Law enforcement monitoring;
- Improving the early identification of victims and the assistance provided to them;
- Risks related to human trafficking in third countries (Rep. of Moldova) and cooperation.

The ProTECT platform, the collaboration platform of organizations specialized in prevention, protection, victim assistance, criminal and civil procedures, lobbying and advocacy for initiatives with a greater impact in the fight against human trafficking, www.traficdepersoane.ro, has supported since the beginning of the war, the creation of a system of verification of actors who provide accommodation, transport and jobs to Ukrainian refugees, as well as the need for an individualized approach among vulnerable people, when it comes to the prevention of human trafficking in all its forms, sexual exploitation, exploitation through labor, forced begging etc.

The members of ProTECT, a union of which AIDRom is a part, have so far assisted several people at risk among Ukrainians with specialized services, carried out prevention campaigns and created informative materials in the online environment to promote safety measures and reporting methods of potential cases.

The ProTECT platform is also co-chair of the Anti-Trafficking Task Force within the UNHCR, AIDRom's implementation partner in some of the most important projects carried out.

Human Trafficking in Times of War

Insights from LEFÖ-Intervention Centre for Trafficked Women in Austria

Soon after the attacks intensified, the EU activated the Temporary Protection Directive for the first time on 04 March 2022 due to the high number of protection seekers, enabling member states to quickly issue a residence permit for displaced persons from Ukraine.

The implementation of the directive varies on the national level. In Austria, for example, third-country nationals who had a permanent residence permit in Ukraine, as well as persons with student visas and undocumented persons, are not covered by the Directive or are affected by transitional arrangements and therefore have no access to support services. This situation increases the risk of exploitation and human trafficking.

On a positive note, the activation of the Mass Influx Directive has also shown in Austria that unbureaucratic access to rights for refugees and displaced persons is possible if there is a political will to do so. Legalisation of residence that is as simple as possible, combined with direct access to the labour market and access to support services that cover basic needs, represent one of the most sustainable preventive measures against human trafficking.

At the same time, after the initial solidarity at the beginning of the war, a permanent and sustainable residence permit in Austria must now be ensured. In recent weeks, many refugees from Ukraine have found accommodation in private homes, while state registration and onward placement do not seem to follow up.

However, the “solidarity” offers of accommodation in private flats also hold a potential danger of isolation and exploitation. LEFÖ – Intervention Centre for Trafficked Women (LEFÖ-IBF) has already received cases in which exploitation in private households have taken place “in secret”. In which trafficked persons are isolated and put under pressure due to language barriers and lack of local knowledge and are forced to do household or childcare work, where promised wages are withheld or passport and travel documents are

Access to permanent safe residence and housing is therefore essential to prevent exploitation. This is particularly challenging against the backdrop of reluctant payment of basic welfare entitlements and the low subsidy of basic welfare towards rental costs, and will put many displaced people in vulnerable positions. In addition, the savings of many will soon be consumed. At first glance, direct access to the labour market seems to make it easy to find paid work, at least for those who fall under the directive, but here, as in the housing sector, the large number of people looking for work can lead to questionable offers in which financial hardship and language barriers are deliberately exploited.

In addition to faster and more targeted measures by state institutions, training is also needed for all those agencies that have direct contact with people who have fled Ukraine, also in the sense of coordinated victim protection. This involves recognising indicators that point to human trafficking and subsequently professionally referring trafficked persons to victim protection institutions.

In the context of prevention and (self-)identification, online outreach work is an indispensable part of combating and preventing human trafficking. The success of LEFÖ-IBF's "Be Safe on the Way" campaign has shown that there is an enormous demand for prepared information tailored to the needs of the target group.
